

CANOVA: Ontario's Opportunity to Lead a Stewardship Economy

Purpose

To introduce CANOVA.SYS™, a stewardship-backed system of value exchange, and to position Ontario, with Waterloo Region as the starting point, as the province that demonstrates its potential for the country.

National Vision

CANOVA connects Canada's natural wealth directly to everyday acts of stewardship. Its supply is anchored in measurable resources such as forests, watersheds, minerals, and renewable energy. Credits are issued when individuals, businesses, or communities take meaningful actions that protect or restore these resources.

The result is a secondary system built on renewal. Every action that safeguards Canada's natural wealth contributes to value that circulates back into communities. This ensures environmental care is rewarded, strengthens local economies, and helps Canada grow more resilient and united.

Why Ontario and Waterloo Region

Ontario is well placed to lead this work. Within the province, Waterloo Region offers the credibility and visibility needed to show CANOVA in practice.

The St. Jacobs Farmers' Market, Canada's largest year-round market, attracts thousands of visitors weekly and brings together a diverse mix of farmers, artisans, and vendors. Its scale and profile make it an ideal flagship site for a pilot that is both visible and practical.

Launching here would provide Ontario with a clear proof point, while reflecting both the tradition of its communities and its reputation for innovation.

Broader Impact

- Local: Empowers farmers, students, and small businesses to gain recognition and value for sustainable practices they already carry out.
- Social: Enables vulnerable individuals to earn through community contribution and exchange credits for essentials, providing stability and dignity.
- Provincial and national: Equips Indigenous Nations, municipalities, and communities to adapt CANOVA to their own circumstances, contributing to a unifying framework rooted in stewardship.

Provincial Relevance

Ontario has the opportunity to lead. By piloting CANOVA here, the province can place itself at the forefront of climate commitments, sustainability, and economic diversification. Tying value creation to the renewal of natural wealth gives Ontario the chance to set the example for how stewardship builds both community strength and long-term economic resilience.

Next Steps

I would welcome the chance to brief you and explore how CANOVA could be piloted in Waterloo Region as a model for Ontario and ultimately, the country.
